Experience:

I have worked in the public school system for nearly 30 years, 20 of those in Washington State. At first, I thought that my high school years were the best. Then I began working with elementary students and thought I had found the best job in the world. I was wrong again because when I returned to a high school setting I received so much satisfaction in knowing that I was part of team that was helping students succeed. When I was chosen by my administrators and co-workers for the Washington State Christa McAuliffe award, I knew I had made a difference.

Ten years ago I relocated to Nevada, and after a brief time working outside of education, I returned to the public school system and began a new adventure with administration in the Northwest Regional Professional Development Program. I felt like I was back home again. In my time with the program I have learned yet another side of education and the impact our staff has with professional development. I am honored to be working with such an excellent group of educators. I believe I have finally made it to the top in doing what I enjoy the best—working for the Washoe County School District and the NWRPDP.
